

Goldie at Home Activity: Snapshots of Suffrage

Activity Overview: You can read a book, but did you know you can read a photo as well? Photographs are a great way to see a snapshot of the past. This visual literacy activity addresses how to look beyond the surface of an image and become detectives searching for clues to better understand a historic photo. The State Historical Society of Iowa not only cares for thousands of historic objects, but also is home to many photographs from Iowa's past.

Connection to Iowa History

Seeds of the women's suffrage movement had already taken root in the state by 1870 when the Iowa Woman Suffrage Association was founded. However, while an amendment to the state's constitution was considered by legislators in every session from that year forward, it was not until April 1919 that the Iowa General Assembly passed a bill granting women the right to vote in presidential elections. Several months later, on July 2nd, Iowa became the 10th state to ratify the federal 19th Amendment, committing to equal suffrage for women a little over a year ahead of the amendment's full ratification in August 1920. Iowans such as Carrie Lane Chapman Catt, Mary Jane Coggeshall and Amelia Bloomer became nationally-recognized figures and were joined by other activists working at the state level to achieve the goal.

How to Understand Historic Photography (Visual Literacy)

Photographs only capture a moment in time. Viewers of historical photos don't know what happened before or after a photo was taken, and it is important to recognize that viewers only see a segment of time. To more fully understand a historic time period portrayed in photos, look at newspapers or other research materials and compare historic photos from different sources for the same time period.
